DEBORAH, NIGERIA

Deborah was chatting with a friend outside her home. Her daughters, Palmata (9) and Kumai (7), were sitting outside the front door while her husband was inside. Suddenly, young men with machine guns drove up and jumped out of their truck. Deborah followed them into her house, but one of them made her lie on the ground and kept her down with a boot on her back. Then she heard shots. Deborah thought she would be next, but the killers left her on the floor. Outside, they grabbed her daughters and forced them into their truck. Deborah ran after them but stumbled and fainted. When she woke up in hospital, the staff confirmed her fears – her husband had been killed and her girls had been kidnapped.

Please pray that God would comfort Deborah and the many Nigerian Christian women who have lost their husbands and other family members in extremist attacks.

Thank God that Release's partners offer trauma-counselling workshops to traumatised survivors of the attacks, and emergency relief supplies to those who have been displaced by the violence.
